

Pope Francis declares WAR against Bible believing Christians!

I first posted this in 2014. It could be Pope Francis will again do something to stop the current slaughter in Gaza showing that he has more power than any civil authority.

“A fundamentalist group, although it may not kill anyone, although it may not strike anyone, is violent. The mental structure of fundamentalists is violence in the name of God.” – Pope Francis

This is a virtual declaration of war against all Bible believing Christians!

Partial transcript

As many of you out there should already know, on this past June 8th (2014), Pope Francis was able to organize an historic peace talk within the confines of the Vatican between the two critical players of the Middle East which are Israel and Palestine, two factions which have had a long-standing feud for quite some time now. But what made that event even more historic in nature is that Pope Francis by some means, was able to organize these peace talks just weeks after the United States of America's peace talks between Israel and Palestine, which they sponsor for them, miserably collapsed in failure!

So Pope Francis has some very interesting timing, don't you think? But if that event all by itself wasn't historic enough for you, Pope Francis made more history at the same time at the same venue, by organizing a very unusual prayer summit between the three religions of the world to come together and pray for peace and forgiveness and for God to bless creation at the same time in the Vatican. Islam, Judaism, and Christianity represented by the Pope united in prayer for peace.

Ladies and gentlemen, you may have not noticed this, but when Pope Francis did this, he was getting on the world loudspeaker making a very clear and profound announcement to the inhabitants of our world. And the announcement he was making is this:

“Ladies and gentlemen of the world, leaders of our world, you see that the world's global leading civil superpower, the United States of America, failed miserably in bringing about peace between these two feuding factions in the Middle East. However, where the United States of America, the world's leading civil superpower failed, the world's leading religious power, the papacy, led by its Pope, will be successful in fomenting peace amongst these two feuding factions. And ladies and gentlemen of the world, you know that there's no other religious denomination or religious leader in existence that can bring about peace and unity amongst all the faiths in our world. However, there is one religious leader, the Pope, that does have the power and authority to bring about peace and unity amongst all the faiths in our world."

Ladies and gentlemen, I hope you realize what you saw. When Pope Francis held these two events simultaneously, he was strategically positioning himself in the midst to declare himself as the only world leader, the singular sovereign moral entity in this world, that can bring about peace and unity within the realms of civil power as well as peace and unity within the realms of religion and faith. He was presenting himself as the world's pre-eminent moral authority in both Church and State.

But if that wasn't enough, maintaining his Usain Bolt (Jamaican retired sprinter, widely considered to be the greatest sprinter of all time) like pace, Pope Francis just days after these historic peace talks and that historic prayer summit, had an interview with the Spanish magazine La Vanguardia, at which point he was asked a very intriguing question which drew out of him a more blood-curdling response. And the question the interviewer asked Pope Francis was this: What are his thoughts on fundamentalism? This was his response:

Now ladies and gentlemen, if you don't find this statement from Pope Francis even a little bit disturbing, it's either because you really don't have in your mind an accurate definition of what a fundamentalist is, or orange may be the new black, but you're still watching entirely too much reality television, because this statement that was made by Pope Francis was a virtual declaration of war against all true Bible believing Christians! You see the term fundamentalist, although you may have heard it kicked around too many times after the 9/11 fiasco, so when you think of fundamentalist, you think of radical Islam and terrorism. But originally did you know that the term fundamentalist was coined to define Christians?

There were some Bible conferences that were held in between 1878 through 1897 called the Niagara Bible Conferences. Fundamentalism was originated from those conferences. Then fundamentalism bloomed in the United States of America around 1901, and it bloomed as a result of Christians wanting to fight back against this tide of secularism, Darwinism, and higher criticism that was coming into the church to define the truth of the Bible. They wanted to get back to Bible truth. So fundamentalism came into existence.

Now there are five doctrines, five beliefs that are used to define a fundamentalist. Two of these doctrines or beliefs are, that if an individual believes that the Bible is the infallible Word of God, that individual is a fundamentalist. And if an individual believes in the literal physical personal second coming of Jesus Christ, that individual is a fundamentalist.

And I know that it may be hard for many of you out there to really believe that Pope Francis, or any other Roman Catholic bishop for that matter, truly believes that a person who believes that the Bible is an infallible Word of God and that Jesus Christ is going to literally personally return to Planet Earth for the second time are people that are worthy of being defined as violent fundamentalists.
