

Visit to Hirosaki Park during Cherry Blossom Time

Hirosaki castle

Saturday, April 28, 2012, I hitchhiked from Niigata to Hirosaki in Aomori Prefecture and visited beautiful Hirosaki Park. The cherry blossoms were in full bloom. The photo shows Hirosaki castle with some people in the foreground and the moon in its first quarter overhead. It was so to meet and talk to strangers! I talked to 8 different people. I met a man from Fukuoka who is a PHD university professor of mathematics. I told him that I consider math to be the language of God. Mathematics is part of design. I also said that I believe the doctrine of evolution, i.e. life and organisms evolving into more and more complex designs, to be false science. If evolution is false science, branches of science such as biology, astronomy, archaeology, geology, etc. that have evolution as one its founding principles have been led astray. "There is no design without a Designer!" I said. He replied the chance of life evolving by accident is high but not zero. I said that reminds me of a comedy scene in a film when the man asks the girl he loves what his chances are with her, "Are they 1 out of a 100?" She replied, "One out of a million!" "You mean I have a CHANCE?" The professor acknowledged the man had no chance with her in real life. But when you talk about creation verses evolution, you are talking about real life.

Miss Aiko who was my guide to Hirosaki Castle

Hirosaki Castle